8 June 2020

New Zealand has crushed Covid-19, but now we need to face up to the national security risks and economic challenges of the pandemic. The New Zealand government must devise a resilience strategy that will ensure our independence and sovereignty are protected in the post-Covid world.

Key findings

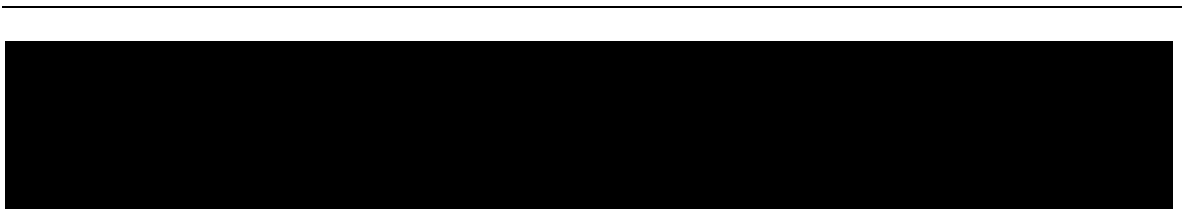

- Covid-19 is a global political crisis, as much as it is global health crisis
- Covid-19-free is the new national security bottom line
- New Zealand is close to eliminating Covid-19 from our nation, now we need to address the national security and economic risks of the pandemic
