

| facilitation and distribution noproduction networks. Just ofsignificant that Japanese com | ne notable example | mately connected is the global be | I into regional supeverage industry. | pply chains andIt is therefore |
|---|--------------------|-----------------------------------|--|------------------------------------|
|   |                    |                                   |  |                                    |
|   |                    |                                   |  |                                    |
|   |                    |                                   |  |                                    |
|   |                    |                                   |  |                                    |
|   |                    |                                   |  |                                    |
|   |                    |                                   |  |                                    |
|   |                    |                                   |  |                                    |
|   |                    |                                   |  |                                    |
|   |                    |                                   |  |                                    |
|   |                    |                                   |  |                                    |
|   |                    |                                   |  |                                    |
|   | -017               |                                   |  |                                    |

THE MINISTER STATE OF THE STATE

Conclusion

It would be unwise to hold back on enhancing the relationship with Japan by overreacting to regional tensions. The reality is that Japan and China have strong economic connections and interests in each other bilaterally but also in economic region building. There are also expectations that Sino-Japanese bilateral relations will